Peer Review 2

While the project does state that its title is Alaneera, I really cannot say that this title grabbed my interest right away mainly because it is not stated in the title itself exactly what Alaneera is. However, within the first page of text it is stated that Alaneera is meant to be a clothing store app for Middle Eastern and Arab clothing, but I think adding in a feature that would allow customers to create their own designs would be beneficial but that is just my personal opinion. Within the first paragraph it says, "among the 205 million Middle Eastern populations", is this meant to represent the people who reside in the Middle East or the number of people around the world who are from and/or still reside in the Middle East? I like the second feature of this application and all of the information that it encompasses, but how about adding a session token that can expire in order to further increase customer data security. Also, maybe include a tracking cookie so that the application offers other items that the customer might like based upon their search and purchase history.

One aspect that this project suffers drastically from on paper is how the same pieces of information are stated over and over again. This problem can be easily fixed by excluding a lot of what is stated repeatedly from the project description at the beginning so that way it does not seem as though the project is just stating the same thing over and over again. While I like the idea of what this application is intended to accomplish which is basically an app that is similar to Amazon but exclusively offers Middle Eastern and Arab fashion, I cannot really say that this will bring anything new to the table that will make it stand out among all of the other apps available on the app store.

The in-text citations that are quoted in the paper are included in the works cited page and there are 10 sources included in that list. Really other than information being repeated and some grammar errors the project itself seems to be fine. I have also pointed out some of the grammatical errors that reside within the paper itself but these are not all of the errors that I came across.
